Knuckling down and succeeding in school puts an average of £140,000 in a young person's back pocket, new in-depth analysis of the economic benefit of education involving more than 400,000 people reveals. It shows achieving five 9 to 4 GCSE grades, including the vital English and maths subjects, adds £80,000 to a student's earnings over their lifetime. A further £60,000 is added to their wages if they go on to achieve at least 2 A levels, highlighting the economic value of the increased knowledge, confidence and employability that arises from success in school. But money and qualifications are not everything. In an article for Psychology Today, Ronald E Riggio Ph.D. discusses 5 keys to success in life. One, it is important to set yourself challenging goals. Two, stand for something and to live those values. Three, forgive ourselves if we fall short of our goals but then try to do better. Four, face life head on and meet our challenges. And finally five, try and leave the world a better place.
